well its a game. This game isnt what I expected, but it may be suitable for someone else

I purchased the game and got 6 friends loaded onto the map and the controllers worked really well

To me the game play and graphics are too busy for the multiplayer experience I was expecting, especially for new players

1. Gameplay, the whole point of the game is single button, I understand that, however with multiple players who have never played before, the controls were not that intuitive - moving around with 1 button instead of traditional controls - which meant there was not really any element of skill, it was just who could fire the most.
2. Graphics, Im not sure if its by design, but the game had huge flashing colours covering the map, which was both disorienting and confusing.

I would be interested in trying out the game if there was possibly an addition of accelerator added (the joysticks already work for turning) because the 8 player addition is something that most other games dont have and was interested in this game initially for. I'll just post my reviews for Avernum I-III here:

I was first introduced to Jeff's games nearly 25 years ago as a shareware version of Exile. I am truly impressed with all of the contributions this series has added on top of what is expected from a D&D-esque dungeon crawler. The characters are fleshed out, the missions are interesting, and there's a real sense of contributing to a changing adventurer's world. A favourite of mine that I have absolutely stolen in my RPG campaigns are the friendly, talking spiders...true genius.. This game does nothing except crash and freeze my computer, just the same as another game from this series. I highly suggest you give it a miss..

Excellent graphic.

But it's not fluent.

Not commend for old machine like mine.

The performance of the game is horrific. Screen tearing/shaking. It was barely playable. The AI is more random than anything, at least with the dune buggies, and the mechanics all felt off. Super cheap, but still not worth it. Maybe with some more polish, it might be worth trying out.. HI-SPEED LAZOR DUBSTEP ZUMA.

This might just be the best causal game I've ever played. The bullet-time and the NEARLY CONSTANT powerups make this game a total blast to play.

The sound effects also evoke the distinct feel of playing in an 80s pinball arcade.. i cant play it at all. I expected this to be a better game, but I was disappointed. 4/10. It's a shame when a game comes out that's 100% your aesthetic but does everything wrong. First off, you can't customize your controls. Yeah, that may or may not be a dealbreaker from some but it's just the tip of the iceberg when you get deeper into the game.

You start off with a few spells and quickly realize how underpowered you are after the first two or three real fights. You might start thinking "Okay, so I'll get stronger after I level up or get some more spells, right?" Joke's on you. The game gets significantly harder with artificial difficulty and you get stuck running from overpowered and overly aggressive enemies that could really use some hit stun at the very least. All the while, the real enemy is the controls.

If you somehow manage to soldier on, you get treated to a very specific stretch of battles that completely test your nerves and sanity. These fights would probably be easier if you could remap your keys... but nope, you got to play the way the developers wanted. Or until they honor their "promise" of adding customization. But it's been over a year. I used to check every once in a while to see if they delivered. Going on over a year, it's pretty obvious this game has all been abandoned.

Lesson learned, Beutifun will never get another dollar from me.. THE GREATEST GAME OF ALL TIME.. nice game :)
