Photo: Associated Press 1 of 26 11/28/2012 Even as Obama's lead in the overall delegate count dwindles -- his delegate advantage has dropped from 50-38 to 47-39 -- his advantage in states that have a big impact on the nomination process remains substantial. In the eyes of the Democratic Party, the four states that have a say in the nomination process -- Florida, Nevada, Iowa and New Hampshire -- will determine whether Obama survives his challenge from Hillary Clinton to become the party's nominee. After that, the process -- particularly in the delegate-rich states of the Midwest -- is a two-way battle between the top tier of frontrunners. Meanwhile, the Republican nomination appears to be well on its way to being decided -- with New Hampshire just a few days away. Tuesday's Iowa caucuses are set to kick off the 2012 presidential campaign. Republicans will gather here to vote in the first-in-the-nation nominating contest. And, some Democrats will gather in the Hawkeye State to make their mark as the first primary. Meanwhile, the Republican nomination appears to be well on its way to being decided -- with New Hampshire just a few days away. 82157476af
